

Morena , and welcome to Friday. Thinking enviously of those of you in AL2 as Auckland heads into another weekend at AL4. (Hopefully our final one.) Speaking of lockdowns and such, we continue to update the Covid-19 resources on the website so be sure to take a look. Thanks also to everyone who has been zooming in for our Thursday lunchtime catch-up sessions. These have been a valuable forum for connecting and sharing insights, observations and information, no matter what alert level we find ourselves in, and those online yesterday suggested we meet again next Thursday. More details here. As always, there's no need to register; just turn up if you can and leave when you want to. Kia pai tō rā whakatā (wherever you are).

A Word from Our Corporate Platinum Sponsor

Colour Selection – It can often be a long process to determine a colour scheme for a project. A qualified Commercial Colour Consultant can help you narrow the options. If there is a Body Corporate committee or a number of people involved in the decision making, it is important to have the final choice documented and signed off to cover any issues, should they arise after painting is completed. It is vital that when painting starts, that all parties are certain the colours meet expectations – rather than waiting until the end of the project.

Viewing colours on colour charts can be very disconcerting. A neutral grey card can help to isolate a colour when viewing charts and making a selection. This prevents distractions from neighbouring colours.

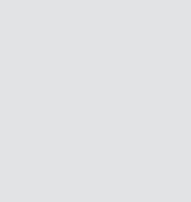

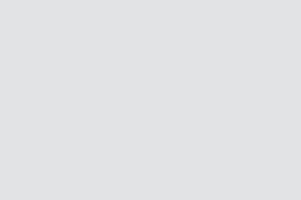

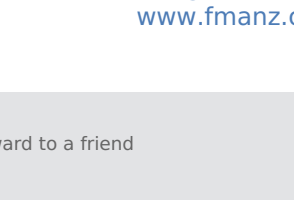

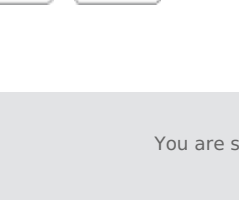

Once final colours have been selected, colour renders of the property and A4 colour samples of the paint are a good way to check the final selection of site. Colours may appear different when viewed at different times of day, eg cooler in afternoon shadows and warmer in morning sunshine. Paint testpots are also a good option to test colour onsite.
